

Abstract

The master thesis „The Fall of Ferdinand Marcos and the Transition to Democracy in the Philippines“ deals with the analysis of politico-historical development of the Philippines and the aim is describe the fall of nondemocratic regime and the subsequent transition do democracy. The attention is paid to the role and tactics of opposition groups among which leadership stakes took place during democratic consolidation. To be place into the context the master thesis deals as well with historical development of political system and its practise.